And again it comes that another Kansaman has several millions coming to him from rich eastern relations. If the report be true there may be another competitor in the Cherokee strip sale, and Jay Gould may want to get down out of the persim mon tree before Christmas. There is no way of estimating just what will happen if it should prove true, but there is no doubt but that the financial storm would be settled, at least settled for those con-

This time it is George Lewis, who for some two years has been living with his son-in-law in Afton township. For some years he lived in Wichita, and came to the conclusion he would move to Afton and try the country air without any town flavor. He is 79 years old, and says his father lived 120 years, and, judging from his feelings now he thinks he will bold out until he is 125 years old, which will give him many years in which to enjoy his immense fortune. The story runs that in revolutionary times General Mercer, of the English army, who was quite rich, made investments in lands in New York city, Phila-delphia and Boston, and that the same was leased for ninety-nine years soon after, and that these leases are soon ended and hence millions of property will go to the medium.

To the Editor of the Engle In the EAGLE of the 11th instant we note with much pleasure your very sensible and pertinent remarks under the head of 'Joint-keepers Fined." With reference to enforcing prohibition you say: "There is just one way of doing it, or making it possible to be done, and that is by killing the place commercially—by stopping its growth and shutting off its enterprise."

It would seem that we have in our midst those who are ready to sacrifice the commercial life of the city, shut off its coterprise, and stop its growth, in order that their one idea may prevail. They would see the entire city sunk ont of sight rather than to have prohibition a failure. They would rather see an hundred stores empty than Chapter of the Gaild, Miss Genivieve Marlowe, president, J. D. Holt, secretary and treasurer. AROUD THE WORLD.

The Kirafy Bros. with their trained dephant and mammoth company, preented "Around the World in Eighty Pays" at the opera house last night before large and appreciative audience. The arts are all in the hands of artists and he specialty parts, mechanical effects and age sittings something superb. THE STOWAWAY.

"The Stowaway," a play that is reputed have broken all records as a magnet in attracting the current coin of the realm to theater box offices, will be seen at the Crawford Grand, Monday, Dec. 15.

The story of this popular play is familiar to almost every reader. It is essentially English, and deals with life in London and its environs. It possesses a strong, intersting plot, the situations are thrilling in the extreme and the climaxes are such that curtain-calls invariably follow.

The original Niblo's Garden cast will be mployed in the portrayal of the work here, and two carloads of scenic and mecanical contrivances, which to use a current phrase, are "out of sight," will add eanty and realism to the production. A pictorial feature that creates a furore whereever seen is the "yacht set," with a glistening hull, real masts and sails and completely appointed in every detail. One of the ultra realistic features of the performance is the safe-blowing exploit of the reformed cracksmen, "Spike" Hennes-

A very prominent young man is in the habit of making a sly trip to Wellington every Sunday, and his last trip was last Sunday. It was stated yesterday by a Wellington man that he had some trouble getting out or town, thinking it best to take a drive to a station a few miles north, where he met the train. On the quiet it is said he had a great time.

Harry Loper, the well known horseman of Wellington, spent yesterday in the city. He said the question as to the point where the great fair could be held in the southwest was settled last year in favor of Wichita. Wichita had already won the reputation of making the state record and giving the best speed ring entertainment and it would always be an easy matter to hold a great fair here as long as the association kept faith with its obligations.

A pretty typewriter joke doesn't always vork one way. There is one well to do lown town merchant at least who has cason to believe that there is a variety in bil person—the characteristic helped to make him what he is financially—and he proposed to run no risks of family discord brough his selection of a secretary. In fact, so sure was he that his typewriter would never introduce the green eyed monster into his domestic circle that he merely announced one evening that he had hat day employed a performer on the literary piano and then dropped the subject. He heard nothing more about it for a month or so, but then he went home one fternoon to find his wife in a state of mind with an open letter in her hand. The let-ter, it was quickly explained, had dropped from the merchant's pocket that morning. It was an innocent note in its way from a business associate, but just at the end it had this sentence: "Met your typewriter at the theatre last night; seemed to be a very chipper young person; spoke of you

There was fire in the good lady's eye as she exhibited this letter. She had heard of typewriters before and all the trouble hey caused. She had decided to confront the horrid person at once. Nothing would do but her husband must excert her to his office and there let her give the chipper young person a lecture on the evils of firting with elderly gentlemen. Not a word said the merchant until balf an hour later he and his spouse reached his office. "The typewriter is in there," he said, pointing to a small room. "You go in there and settle this thing yourself." In went the wife, and in a moment she was back again, with a dazed look on her face. Just behind her was a tall young man, with a sorely puzzled expression on his countenance, "Yes, madam," he was saying, "I am the typewriter—the only one in the office"—
